Invited guest on "Your South Florida," with Pam Giganti, January 10, 2017.

South Florida Hospital News; A front page article, authored by Steve Ullmann, chair and professor of health sector management and policy, advised policymakers to be careful in their approach to altering the Affordable Care Act, noting that because there are so many pieces, as in a puzzle, a piecemeal approach could have unintended consequences. January 2017.

CBS Marketwatch; An article about the 2017 deadline to sign up for insurance coverage under the Affordable Care Act included insight from Steve Ullmann, chair and professor of health sector management and policy, who noted that "the risk of not signing up at this point in time is greater than the risk of signing up." January 30, 2017.

WPBT – TV; Steve Ullmann, chair and professor of health sector management and policy, was interviewed in a segment on the future of the Affordable Care Act under the Trump Administration, noting that "The repeal might occur, but the repeal will be a few years from now, which is relatively typical of policies." January 20, 2017.

South Florida Hospital News; An article featured information about the School's new Master in Health Administration program. The article included quotes from Steve Ullmann, chair and professor of health sector management and policy, and Karoline Mortensen, an associate professor, who noted that the program "has a strong foundation in finance, accounting and process improvement as well as timely health care issues." February 1, 2017.

WIOD Radio (Miami); A segment about President Trump's statements on lowering the cost of prescription drugs featured a live interview with Steve Ullmann, chair and professor of health sector management and policy, who noted that "other countries use the power of the federal government to negotiate down the price of pharmaceuticals and that's actually one of the reasons our prices are higher, we don't negotiate prices down." February 1, 2017.

WLRN Radio; The hour-long "Sunshine Economy" program about the future of health care reform featured interviews with Steve Ullmann, chair and professor of health sector management and policy, and three national industry and policy experts, noting that they would be featured speakers at the School's conference, The Business of Health Care Post Election, taking place March. February 27, 2017.

Miami Today; An article previewed the School's Business of Health Care Post Election conference with numerous quotes from Steve Ullmann, chair and professor of Health Sector Management and Policy, who noted that the conference would feature "some of the nation's most experienced thought leaders from business and government...to help shed light on what the anticipated [health care policy] changes will mean for business." March 2, 2017.

WSVN Local 10 Miami; A TV segment about the GOP health care reform bill included insight from Steve Ullmann, chair and professor of health sector management and policy, who noted that "There's actually more agreement than people realize" between the Affordable Care Act and the new proposal. March 7, 2017.

South Florida Hospital News and Healthcare Report; An article featured insight from all six sessions at the School's Business of Health Care Conference, including quotes from many of the speakers, as well as Steve Ullmann, director of the School's Center for Health Sector Management Policy, which organized the conference, who noted that "At a time of great uncertainty over federal and state health care policies, our speakers provided valuable insights on the delivery, cost and quality of patient care, access to insurance coverage, the worldwide health care labor market, and business and investment opportunities regionally, nationally, and globally." March 13, 2017.

Politico. An article questioning whether President Trump and Republicans are "sabotaging" the Affordable Care Act by creating uncertainty about the law included insight from Steve Ullmann, chair and director of health sector management and policy, who noted that "They must know sabotage won't work now that they control Washington." March 14, 2017.

Miami Herald; An article about the impact of the GOP health care reform bill on Florida, based on a report by the Congressional Budget Office, included comments from Steve Ullmann, professor and director of health sector management and policy, who predicted that "the people who will be buying insurance will be people who will tend to be more prone to illness, perhaps a little higher in age, and as a result because those are higher-cost users, premiums will go up." March 14, 2017.

Tampa Bay Times; An article about opposition to the GOP health care reform bill among Florida Republican lawmakers included insight from Steve Ullmann, professor and director of health sector management and policy, who noted that "There are significant consequences for Florida," if the GOP bill is approved. March 15, 2017.

Miami Herald; An article questioning the accuracy of statements by Health and Human Services Secretary Tom Price that people are uninsured because they don't like Obamacare included insight from Steve Ullmann, chair and professor of health sector management and policy, who noted that "They are uninsured because there is no way that they can afford the insurance ... then there are others, generally the 'young invincibles,' who find that the penalty of $695 is less than the cost of the insurance policies." May 15, 2017.
